SELECTED HEADLINES

Shares listed on the Johannesburg Stock Exchange continued their steady decline on Friday as investors worried that the boom in the commodity cycle was nearing an end which could hit South Africa's foreign currency earnings. The slide was further worsened by a fall in Wall Street shares driven by decline in technology stocks and fears of a rise in corporate taxes in the United States. The benchmark all-share index closed down 0.71% to 62,862 points, ending the day with a weekly drop of 2.2%, its third consecutive week of decline, which has brought the broader index down to its early February level. The blue-chip index of top 40 companies slipped by 0.86% to 56,605 points.

Pepkor says vaccines key to job boost in South Africa

South Africa's largest clothing retailer sees a successful Covid-19 vaccination rollout as key to reopening the economy and adding new stores, helping to address the world's highest unemployment rate. "If we get people vaccinated, the economy can normalise quickly," Pepkor CEO Leon Lourens said in an interview. "If the economy normalises, we can create jobs." The government temporarily imposed strict restrictions to curb the spread of the coronavirus from March 2020, but subsequent waves of infections have forced some measures to remain in place. Those include caps on gatherings both indoors and outdoors, preventing major sports events with fans. Meanwhile, South Africa is cut off from many parts of the world due to travel curbs, hammering the tourist industry. The economy went on to contract the most in at least 27 years in 2020, extending its longest downward cycle since World War II. "That's not good enough for an emerging economy like ours," Lourens said. "The current unemployment levels are just not sustainable. Africa's most industrialised nation was slow to purchase vaccines and has still only fully inoculated about 19% of its adult population. The major challenge has since shifted from a shortage of supply to weak demand, health officials have warned, with hesitancy and scepticism widespread. Large mining companies are trying to combat hesitancy and many are offering onsite vaccinations. Still, South Africa's failure to grow the economy is likely to exacerbate the country's jobs crisis, said Neal Froneman, the chief executive officer of Sibanye Stillwater, the country's largest mining-industry employer. "The government has a view that they can solve unemployment by investing in massive infrastructure projects, but they don't have the capacity and the competence to do that," he said in an interview. Pepkor, along with many other South African companies, is battling to recover from violent unrest that rocked the country in July. With about 550 of its shops damaged, the retailer still hopes to stick to its annual store opening program of about 300 outlets a year alongside an ambitious refurbishment plan. "If we can open 300 stores a year, we're talking about 3,000 jobs a year that we create," Lourens said. "But that we can only do in a growing economy." If the South African economy continues to suffer, the risk of further social unrest remains, he said. "It's just not possible for our economy to be in a good condition while our whole tourism sector is gone, while all big events are gone," he said. "People often forget, and this is not even in the employment numbers, but for every theatre production, every wedding, every sports game, the informal sector works at those events."

EUROPEAN MARKET COMMENTARY

SELECTED HEADLINES

European markets closed lower on Friday as global investors continued to weigh the prospect of slowing economic growth. The pan-European Stoxx 600 closed down by nearly 1%, having earlier been up by as much as 0.7%. Travel and leisure stocks added 1.1% to lead gains while basic resources fell 4%. The Stoxx 600 also saw a weekly decline of 1%, down for the third straight week. Data on Friday showed that U.K. retail sales fell unexpectedly in August, dropping 0.9% month-on-month against a Reuters average forecast for a 0.5% rise. The fourth consecutive monthly decline marks the longest negative streak since records began.

AMERICAN MARKET COMMENTARY

SELECTED HEADLINES

Stocks dipped on Friday as investors remain cautious due to a resurgent Covid virus, a Federal Reserve meeting this week and a historical tendency for September to be a weak month for equities. Mega-cap technology stocks were mostly in the red, with social media giant Facebook dropping 2.2% and Alphabet falling just shy of 2%. Apple lost 1.8%, and Microsoft slipped 1.7%. The Food and Drug Administration advisory committee on Friday rejected a plan to administer booster shots of Pfizer and BioNTech's Covid-19 vaccine to the general public.

COMMODITY MARKET COMMENTARY

SELECTED HEADLINES

Gold prices inched lower this morning, pressured by a firmer dollar, while investors awaited guidance from the U.S. Federal Reserve on when it is likely to start withdrawing its bond-buying program. Oil prices fell today, extending losses from Friday after the U.S. dollar jumped to a three-week high and the U.S. rig count rose, although nearly a quarter of U.S. Gulf of Mexico output remained offline in the wake of two hurricanes.

The rand weakened on Friday, reversing some early gains and was set to close the week with an overall loss of almost 3.8% as the U.S. dollar rose and weak domestic economic data weighed on sentiment. At the close of Friday's session, the rand was trading around R14.75 to the dollar or 1.01% weaker. After three weeks of strong gains, the rand has reversed direction since Tuesday, buffeted by poor domestic retail data, a retreat in commodity prices and a recommendation from investment bank JPMorgan to sell the currency.
