South African Reserve Bank Governor Lesetja Kganyago emphasized the importance of a cautious approach to adjusting interest rates, aiming to avoid future regrets. "In an environment of uncertainty, it is crucial for the central bank to act with care and not add to the noise already present in the data," Kganyago stated in an interview with CNBC Africa on Monday.

European shares climbed to a six-week high on Monday, buoyed by strong performances in mining and luxury stocks. Political uncertainty remained, however, as French President Emmanuel Macron had yet to appoint a new prime minister following the far-right National Rally's unexpected by-election loss on Sunday. In other developments, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy advocated on Monday for a diplomatic resolution to Russia's war in Ukraine. He also proposed the possibility of deploying foreign troops in Ukraine as a temporary measure until the country secures membership in the NATO military alliance. Meanwhile, markets are focused on the European Central Bank, with expectations of a 25-basis-point rate cut in its upcoming decision on Thursday.

Wall Street's main indices fell on Monday, led by a decline in Nvidia that pressured tech stocks. Investors are focused on key inflation data this week, with the consumer price index (CPI) due Wednesday and the producer price index (PPI) on Thursday, ahead of the Federal Reserve's Dec. 17-18 meeting. Market expectations for a 25-basis-point rate cut have risen to over 85% following November's higher unemployment rate of 4.2%, signalling a cooling labour market. Despite this, Fed officials, including Chair Jerome Powell, remain cautious about easing monetary policy, citing the economy's resilience.

Asia-Pacific markets mostly advanced this morning as traders responded to Beijing's announcement of "more proactive" fiscal measures and "moderately" looser monetary policy to boost domestic consumption in 2024. Meanwhile, Australia's central bank held interest rates steady at 4.35% during its December meeting, as widely expected, while softening its hawkish tone by expressing "some confidence" that inflation was returning to target. The Reserve Bank of Australia's statement notably omitted prior language suggesting no options were off the table and that policy needed to remain restrictive.

Gold prices surged to two-week highs on Monday, climbing over 1% as China's central bank resumed gold purchases after a six-month hiatus and optimism grew about a potential U.S. Federal Reserve rate cut next week. Meanwhile, oil prices edged slightly lower this morning but stayed near recent highs, supported by geopolitical risks following the fall of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad and China's pledge for increased policy stimulus. In contrast, China's iron ore imports in November dropped 1.91% from October, according to customs data released today, reflecting a seasonal slowdown in steel demand as colder weather hampers construction in the country's northern regions.
